A corporal of the Sixth Artillery has had an unpleasant if not unusual experience. Some time ago a man deserted from Post Honolulu and was gone a week. Though it was known he was in Honolulu, he could not be found. At last, the men were requested to have him arrested on sight, should any of them come up with him.

The critic of the Los Angeles Times in criticising "The New Dominion" says: As to Clay Clement and his surpassingly beautiful comedy, "The New Dominion," let us not forget to say before we forget it, that both are worth going miles to see by those who enjoy art for art's sake as well as by those who desire only to be touched to laughter or to tears, for, mark you, there are tears as well as things to laugh at in this beautiful idyl of old Virginia which has been so deftly fashioned into playable form by the genius of Mr. Clement as a playwright, and which is made still more fascinating to human intelligence by the masterly ability of Mr. Clement as an actor.

Every time he would pass down near the men he would pass down near the camp were in the job. At last police, called out from various sides. It seemed that nearly all of the men at the camp were in the job. At last police, whistles were introduced, and every time the corporal appeared there were blasts from these pesky things.

Finally, the corporal's patience gave out. Life became a milistone and his career was through brambles and in rough places. In desperation he sought Major Mills and stated that he could stand it no longer. Nothing could be done, for it was impossible to tell who was doing the calling and a conviction, at any rate, was impossible. Major Mills decided to assign the young man to duty at the hospital.
